Of the above, I understand that Darden does not wish to be reappointed, and I believe that the same applies to Ryerson, or in any event he could be dropped without any difficulty.

All of the others would be useful members, but none of them need be retained, although I would hope that Lovett and Baker could be persuaded to do so, if the President so desires.

All of the three military members have been useful participants in the work of the committee, but there might be some reason to rotate one or two of them. Of the three, John Hull and Deolittle have made an especially fine contribution.

As possible new members I would suggest Sidney Souers, who might well be considered for the post of chairman of the newly constituted committee; Frank Pace, and either Jim Killian (the first chairman of the committee) or George Kistiakowsky. I agree that Gordon Gray would also be a very useful member of the committee.
